the University of Szeged in the fall of 1945 its facilities were greatly reduced from normal. The university was always well regarded and was known as a place where capable young professors often rose to head departments. [] the level of technical instruction was high in 1945 and before. At present there must still be some excellent teachers on the faculty but no doubt there is a lack of free information and a greater lack of costly research facilities. [] the men remaining on the staff of the medical school can still adequately impart to students the minimum requirements of a medical education. []
